

Equal Representation?

Raul Grijalva
Representative for Hispanics

???????????
Representative for Whites

Illegal immigration is a hot topic in America, particularly with the passage of the new Arizona anti-illegal immigration law SB1070 – a law which came about as a result of the federal government's refusal to secure our nation's border and protect its citizens. In response to SB1070, Raul Grijalva, a member of the U.S. House of Representatives, has called for a boycott of the very state he was elected to represent. Seeing beyond the rhetoric Mr. Grijalva presents, one must look to the deeper reason why someone who is elected to represent the best interests of his state would go to such an extent as to encourage damage to it.

Mr. Grijalva has been a member of MEChA, an Hispanic group which works for the "self determination" and the "betterment of La Raza" – "The People" according to Hispanic advocacy groups, "La Raza" can also be translated as "The Race." Clearly they prefer the former in order to avoid the charge of "racism"; whether they work for the betterment of "The People" or "The Race," however, they remain ethnocentric organizations.

As a Congressman Mr. Grijalva has worked on "uniting diverse factions of the Latino community in order to focus on common goals." Raul Grijalva's past association with MEChA, his work as a Representative, and his stance on SB1070 all show his allegiance to "La Raza." Mr. Grijalva does not put what is good for Arizona as a whole ahead of the interests of "La Raza." He works for and speaks on behalf of the people with whom he has an ethnic commonality.

Yet, should a politician of European descent openly advocate for his racial brethren he would soon find himself under attack in the media and in many cases by other White people. This begs the questions:

Why is it that when non-Whites work for the interests of their people they are applauded while if a White person does so they are demonized?

With America and Europe facing mass immigration of non-Whites and with White birthrates unable to compete with non-White birthrates, isn't it time for those of European descent to start working for their interests, and even the very existence of their kind?

If Whites don't do what's in the best interest of White People who will?

It is long past due for Whites to act in their own best interests.
We cannot afford to neglect the welfare of our people any longer.
